

Do you know your dog's heartworm risk?

Everywhere there are mosquitoes, there's heartworm disease. Luckily it is preventable. Ask us how you can keep your pup from becoming a sad statistic.

According to 2015 data from the Companion Animal Parasite Council, one in 78 dogs tested in the U.S. tested positive for heartworm disease. That was 115,016 dogs of 8,993,885 tests. There's not a single state that's immune to heartworm risk, either.

The unfortunate part about those numbers is that heartworm disease is entirely preventable through year-round preventive medication. While there are treatment options, infection is very difficult to treat—and very expensive—once a dog has been diagnosed as heartworm positive. Wouldn't you rather keep your pet safe than take the risk?

Talk to us during your appointment to go over the infection risk in our state and county. We'll also decide on the heartworm preventive that's best for your pet.
